

On Thursday, November 18, 2021, we noticed some "changes" inside the building of the School of Biology (Aristotle University of Thessaloniki). Specifically, in the foyer area, there was plasterboard placed blocking half the space, leaving a corridor between the two entrances of the building. In fact, there were even some visible red marks (X) on certain walls, including one wall of the squatted space marking them for demolition. After researching, we found that on September 16th, 2021, at the Ministry of Digital Governance and the Transparency program, there was a project titled: "RECONSTRUCTION NEEDS FOR THE SCHOOL OF SCIENCES, neighbouring building", commissioned for 1,320,600.00 euro. One of the stipulates was to complete the project within 16 months from the signed agreement. From the layout plans it is clear that they intend to repurpose the squatted space as a "waiting area" - something "extremely viable" for the functionality of the school. Rectors and contractors have already taken action and started remodelling "unused" spaces...
